

In many European countries, acupuncture is among the most used Complementary and Alternative Medicine (CAM) therapies for a wide range of disorders within both public and private health facilities. In Italy, it is included within the so-called national Essential Levels of Care (Livelli Essenziali di Assistenza LEAs) only for anaesthesiologic purposes, and within the LEAs of some Regions only for selected clinical conditions.

This is the result of a rigorous process of evaluation of the available clinical studies, which has established the efficacy and security of acupuncture of some conditions. However, there remain some methodological problems that need to be addressed for pursuing research activities aimed at the acquisition of additional evidence on the efficacy of acupuncture, as well as on its integration into the healthcare systems.

Purpose of the Symposium is to discuss the most controversial aspects of the different phases of acupuncture research and provide practical and authoritative answers, useful for informing future health policies and for promoting the safety and effectiveness of acupuncture treatments.

The Symposium is organized in the framework of the Joint Sino-Italian Laboratory on Traditional Chinese Medicine (IoSIL), hosted in Italy by the Istituto Superiore di Sanità (ISS), and of the EU Project China and Europe Taking Care of Healthcare Solutions CHETCH, of which AMAB is partner.
